I have a machine running a server on OS X that has many different IP addresses. I'd like to be able to SSH to this server from different IP addresses at the same time without the server knowing it's being accessed from multiple addresses. My guess is that I'd need to open up different ports for the different addresses? How should I do this? A: set the bind_address parameter in sshd to 0.0.0.0:0 or :: or whatever # OR ssh -4 user@IP -p 443 (connects to port 443) # OR ssh -4 user@IP -p 443,2222 (connects to ports 443 and 2222) Only 0.0.0.0:0 will listen on all IPs 0.0.0.0 means "listen on all interfaces" :: means "listen on all interfaces and all loopback interfaces" A: Another way to do this is to use the -P option of ssh. This instructs ssh to run the client in the background, allowing you to perform multiple SSH commands (so long as your server is not accepting new connections, that is). From man ssh: -P port[:hostport[:hostport...]] Specifies the port or ports to forward to the remote host. Also used as the list of desired network ports to listen on. If the -2 option is present, the argument is a comma-separated list of the host and port. For example, the command ssh -2 git@example.com -P 80,443 first establishes an SSH connection to example.com on ports 80 and 443. If you have the right number of 570a42141b
