Lipid and fatty acid compositions in the liver of guinea pigs fed a diet rich in saturated fatty acids. Lipid and fatty acid compositions of guinea pig (Cavia porcellus) liver were studied with the use of fractionated lipids separated by thin-layer chromatography. Guinea pigs were fed for 6 wk a semi-purified diet containing 25% of either saturated (palmitic), monounsaturated (palmitoleic), or polyunsaturated (linolenic) fatty acids. A significant increase in total liver phospholipids was found with the diets containing polyunsaturated fatty acids compared with those containing saturated fatty acids. A similar pattern was observed for phospholipid fractions studied; the double bond concentration in the fatty acid composition of the total liver phospholipids was higher with diets rich in polyunsaturated fatty acids than with saturated fatty acids. The composition of liver neutral lipids was characterized by a higher proportion of triglycerides and cholesterol esters and a lower proportion of free fatty acids and wax esters in the diet containing polyunsaturated fatty acids than in those containing saturated fatty acids. Fatty acid composition of liver wax esters was influenced by the dietary fat source. The level of the saturated fatty acids in hepatic neutral lipids was increased with a diet rich in saturated fatty acids, whereas the unsaturated fatty acids (mainly polyunsaturated fatty acids) were reduced. The proportions of n-6 and n-3 fatty acids in liver triglycerides were higher
