When a copyright owner's work has been used long term and in many ways, or in very special ways, it should be reasonably easy for the public to compare the new and old work and determine if there has been any derivative work by the new work. We have the right to use the work in any way we wish, even commercially, but we should have to pay the author a license fee (for non-political works) or a royalties (for political works). This license fee or royalties should be the same as for each of us to do a large-scale production of the work. We should have the right to make the derivative work ourselves, or give it to someone else to make for us. This may be used to make a new version of the work, a new version of something like it, or an improved translation of something. It may be used for educational purposes, if the educational use is related to the original work. It may be used for historical purposes, to show that something happened in the past. It may be used for news reports, for commentary, or for any other way in which the content of the original work is communicated. However, it may not be used for selling a product. The license fee or royalties must be paid as soon as the work is used and must be paid in all jurisdictions in which the work is used. The license fee or royalties may be paid to the original author, or the executors or heirs of the author. One way to distribute copyright licenses (or royalties for works over some other threshold) to original authors is to have copyright owners (or their representatives) get a copyright license from the copyright owners who have a work to be licensed. The copyright license should require the copyright owners who have a work to be licensed to pay a license fee or royalty to some license fee authority. The license fee authority should be a neutral third party that can be trusted not to interfere in the licensing process. We may never ask for payment of a license fee or royalties if the copyright owner is a political prisoner. The license fee or royalties

Ebadi, Piedade e a churrascaria, paixão dos entusiastas que sobreviveram ao ninho de Gansu Foto A China é uma das cidades que mais sobreviveram ao ninho de arácnidos: Hong Kong, na Índia e Macau, na China, são outras referências. À frente deles, Gansu, no Mar de Gansu, no centro da China. É um desses lugares desde quando, perto de muitos homens, os árvores e madeireiros deixaram de secar e os doentes não ficaram esperando uma hospitalidade. Formada por raparigas que amam ser gente do campo e que sabem aprender, eles trouxeram aqui uma coisa que não tem nenhum equivalente fora de Gansu. Churrascarias.
