Q: How to call a new method from inner class

I have a code in which i need to generate a new method name sequence. It can be done in many ways but my problem is it has to be in inner class of main method.

public class Main { class Submit { public String getMethodName(){ return ""; } } public static void main(String[] args){ Main m = new Main(); m.setSubmit(); m.getSubmit().getMetho dName(); } } A: In your case you have two options. One is to pass Submit as argument to Main, the other is to implement the method in the subclass of Submit. The methods:

public class Main { private final Submit submit; public Main() { this(new Submit()); } public Main(Submit submit) { this.submit = submit; } private String

getMethodName() {

SP Password Generator is a light-weight password generation tool. It works by setting up a random sequence of characters, numbers and/or symbols in a number of random way and thus producing a long and secure password. Although the idea of this program is to create random passwords, it is also possible to control some of the parameters to create lengthy passwords that utilize all the available keys on your keyboard. The main window of this program is fairly simple and consists of a few fields, where you can set the desired random sequence that you want to have in your password, including the number of characters and its values, the type of characters, and the keys you want to utilize. There's also an Enable/Disable button, which will control whether your generated password will start with a number or not. Advanced users can specify certain advanced settings for the password, such as where to find one of the 32 available characters and the number of characters the generated password will have. But the focus of this program is on its ability to quickly create random passwords, so you don't really have to bother with these settings. You can use the dedicated buttons to specify what you want your password to be, press the Generate button to start the process and then paste the password anywhere you want in the text box or press the Copy button to save it to your clipboard. You can start the same process by repeatedly pressing the Paste button or create passwords from a file. However, you should note that you don't have any preview of your generated passwords and you can't specify the characters on your keyboard, which means that you can easily make typos or miss some buttons.
