Chicago Mayor Lori Lightfoot, during an appearance on ABC7 Chicago, said that 2020 Democratic presidential hopeful Joe Biden's comments on police brutality against black men is "racist." Lightfoot said, "Let's be clear: It's a racist view." She continued, "I mean, the fact is that African American men are more likely to be in the criminal justice system and more likely to be stopped by the police when they do not pose a direct threat to the officers or anybody else." A week later, they're dead. A modern Sherlock Holmes tale, The Sinkhole traces Ann's violent descent from frustrated and yearning adolescence to budding adulthood, reeling from the loss of a friend and guilty of the unspeakable. Although he himself lived to the age of 75, Hayward was born in 1943 and he is very much of his generation – straining to connect to younger people in his books through humour, sadness and an often elegant prose style. The Sinkhole is a mind-melting tour of the minefield of adolescence, unsorted through a post-Sixties psyche. While I enjoyed the novella, Hayward's prose was just a little too flowery for my taste. I prefer that his characters are rounded and believable rather than models of radical normality. The

 of Britain The Flotilla of Britain consisted of floating anti-submarine defences built during the last years of the Second World War to protect the eastern coast of Great Britain. Its original function was to protect the vital decoy town of Portland, but because of navigational problems and a decline in opposition bomber activity, its role was soon reduced to patrol for German U-boats off the East Coast of England. After the war its batteries were dismantled and its gun turrets scrapped. It was sold for scrap and broken up at Vickers-Armstrong ship breakers yard in Barrow-in-Furness. History In 1940 the Royal Navy concluded that it was impossible to defend the entrance to the English Channel against the sort of attack that was still possible the year after the Battle of France. The focus of air and sea defence was shifted to the approach to the south of England and a series of anti-submarine patrols were dispatched into the waters to the south of England. Anti-submarine patrols were an accepted hazard of laying the foundations of an Atlantic defensive line. Patrols were done by laying arrays of lookout apparatus on a boom attached to the bows of a decked vessel. When the chance came, these lookout boats would steam around the area, five or six in number in a group, then return to take reports of any submerged submarine, or of any contact made with any German aircraft. In 1943 the North Eastern Patrol adopted a more serious role, that of patrolling the eastern seaboard of Great Britain for any sign of attack on the vital decoy town of Portland. The units for this purpose were the Flotilla of Britain (Fleet). The system The craft had their main target to lay a picket line on the surface in the sea and keep it manned. In addition they were required to keep an ear on sounds and reports that could mean the submarine was in view, if this was the case, the craft would maintain it and report to the search headquarters that it had been found. This crew would then communicate with the patrol headquarters which would report its findings back. The craft formed three flotillas of similar vessels, each flotilla was subdivided into more patrols called detachments. The look-outs on the craft would be given wave lanterns so they could see their targets on the surface, and the only fuel necessary for the flotilla was limited to that required to maintain the overnight watch. Of the lookout craft itself
