Right Ventricular Percutaneous Myocardial Viable Myocardium Identification Using Photoacoustic Imaging with Blood and Myocardial Contrast Ultrasound. The investigation of right ventricular (RV) viability is important, because chronic RV failure accounts for a large proportion of cardiovascular deaths. Myocardial photoacoustic imaging (MPI) identifies regions of high microvascular density, and thus, of potential viable myocardium. In this study, we evaluated the feasibility of MPI combined with blood oxygen level-dependent MRI and Doppler myocardial contrast echocardiography for visualizing viable myocardium of RV. Ten patients without RV infarction and 10 patients with RV myocardial infarction received both endomyocardial biopsies (EMBs) and MRI, along with MPI. RV ejection fraction was estimated by MRI, and regional wall motion and function by echocardiography. In 15 ROIs, e79caf774b
