Description of the Related

Art Multipath propagation of electromagnetic energy is the well-known effect wherein an incident wavefront encounters an interface between different mediums (such as a gas and a solid), which delays the wave. Accordingly, the wavefront arrives at the receiving end of a transmission link delayed and/or distorted. This can cause error in data transmission because of the distortion in the received signal. To combat this phenomenon, two types of receivers are used. One type of receiver is a Single-Input, Multiple-Output (SIMO) receiver which receives a multiple signal, each signal having a different carrier frequency. Multiple signals may be received by the SIMO receiver and processed for decoding. The second type of receiver is the Multiple-Input, Multiple-

Output (MIMO) receiver. The MIMO receiver, as the name implies, receives multiple input signals (such as reflections of a transmitted signal) and uses a combiner to produce the appropriate individual information streams. The MIMO receiver is preferred because the higher the number of inputs the better the performance of the receiver. In a mobile wireless communication environment, the wireless communication channel may be a multipath propagation channel. A channel is said to be multipath propagation if it is composed of reflections of the transmitted signal from more than one reflecting surface. In this environment, the wireless communication channel may become a MIMO channel. A wireless communication channel may become a MIMO channel when a physical object, such as a building, a bus

I spend a lot of time in this city and although I am somewhat in the minority (4 years in Paris and I'm Canadian), I want to discourage any one who is familiar with French culture to go to a Quebecois restaurant. They will take your shit, will ignore your requests, and be obnoxious and rude. I'm not kidding here, I've been to 5 in Montreal to try and deal with French service and found it to be that way everywhere. On the other hand, people from the USA can understand French, are welcomed by Quebecois, and are treated like kings. This is because they are not acknowledging that they are in a different culture. This is a war that has been fought for decades in Canada and the USA. Montreal is like a small Little Italy compared to New York City (and by saying that, I mean that vegetables and food cost $10, meats $10+, and drinks $20+.) NY is like a sprawling Roman Empire compared to Montreal. ~~~ icy I have a friend who is from Montreal, and whenever we go to a Canadian restaurant she's got a list of things she won't eat that are common in other restaurants: raw eggs, uncooked meat, and raw dairy products are all off-limits here.
