Clostridioides difficile infection (CDI) continues to be a significant cause of morbidity and mortality. Procalcitonin (PCT) can be used to distinguish C. difficile from other etiologies of fever. However, its value in treating CDI has not been studied. The objective of this study was to assess the effect of PCT in critically ill patients on all-cause mortality, C. difficile infection

(CDI), antibiotic-associated diarrhea (AAD), or CDI-related complications. We searched PubMed, MEDLINE, EMBASE, CINAHL, and Web of Science up to July 2017 and performed an updated search for randomized controlled trials and cohort studies investigating PCT use for the treatment of CDI. Studies were selected based on predetermined inclusion and exclusion criteria. Main outcomes of interest included CDI, CDI-related complications, AAD, antibiotic use, and mortality. Non-English articles, protocol only, and case reports were excluded. The meta-analysis included 4 randomized controlled trials and 7 cohort studies (including 428 patients), with studies enrolling between 10 and 106 patients per study. Using meta-regression analysis, there was no association between PCT use and the number of days with diarrhea ($P = .13$), CDI ($P = .54$), AAD ($P = .12$), or antibiotic use ($P = .60$) in patients with CDI. Using the longest available follow-up, there was a nonsignificant decrease in overall mortality of 7% (95% confidence interval, -1%-16%) in patients with CDI and 27% (95% confidence interval, -1%-54%) in patients with C. difficile colonization and no CDI. No statistically
