DoD News News Article Pentagon: No New Iraq Vote Needed By Jim

Garamone American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON, May 29, 2008 [?] Iraqis will continue to govern themselves without a vote, said Pentagon Press Secretary Geoff Morrell, responding to an Izzat al-Duri rally in Baghdad today. "The issue of the constitution will not be voted on by the Iraqi people; that is contrary to the Constitution," he said. "The relevant articles of the Constitution will be read by the Iraqi people, the judgment rendered on them by the Prime Minister of the country, they will be ratified by the parliament of the country, [and] they will be approved by the Iraqi people. That's how the constitution will be ratified." A group of Iraqi political leaders, including Foreign Minister Hoshyar Zebari, gathered outside the Sheraton Hotel in Baghdad where Morrell is speaking to demonstrate the long-standing promise of a constitutional referendum, when all Iraqis are given the chance to approve or reject the document. Zebari told a news conference today that the Izzat al-Duri crowd was also protesting the Iraqi Interior Ministry's decision to close a mosque in

Baghdad, where the cleric's supporters had taken refuge. "The interior minister is trying to have a witch-hunt against one mosque," Zebari said. "It's not the government, but one minister is trying to impose his will on other ministers." Al-Duri's supporters stormed the Iraqi Ministry of Interior compound in response to the decision to close the mosque. Supporters claim the ministry sided with Saddam Hussein to close the mosque, and they demand that it be reopened. According to Iraqi police sources, the ministry has agreed to reopen the mosque, but the conditions that must be met for it to be restored include that police be placed in the mosque and that a religious official known as a mujtaba be in control of the mosque. "The interior ministry has agreed to reopen the mosque," Zebari said. "We will allow the interior ministry to do that. But we are not going to accept the conditions that they impose on the mosque. We believe there is a religious leader already in the mosque who should be the mujtaba, and we are not going to accept any interference from the police." During the demonstrations, an Iraqi journalist went into the mosque, contacted

Enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay for detecting aflatoxin B1 in extracts of ground food and urine by using a biotin:streptavidin complex. A solid-phase assay was developed for the detection of aflatoxin B1 (AFB1) in samples of ground food and urine. The assay uses an anti-AFB1 monoclonal antibody covalently bound to streptavidin-coated wells. The biotinylated AFB1 complex is then detected with horseradish peroxidase-labeled monoclonal antibody followed by an ABTS solution. Under optimal conditions, the assay was sensitive to 2 ng/mL AFB1. Recovery of AFB1 spiked in ground beef was 90-100% after extraction with water, 60-70% with chloroform, 90-100% with ethanol, and 100% with hexane. AFB1 content was undetectable in urine samples. Confirmation of AFB1 levels above the analytical limit of the assay could be done by incubating extracts in the presence of alpha-amanitin. Březová (Frýdek-
