It was January 17, 1993. You were driving down a highway in San Diego County, California. At around 4:55 in the afternoon, you ran a red light at an intersection, which caused you to make an incorrect left turn onto a one-way street. As you made your initial turn, you slid into the back of a Mercedes sedan driven by an elderly man, Eddie B. Mills Jr. You were unhurt, but Mr. Mills came out of his car with a black bag in his hands. When he called out to the man behind the wheel, the driver slammed on the brakes and came to a screeching halt. You were not the intended target, but that didn't make you feel any worse than the driver and he immediately started running towards you. He had a handgun and you were convinced that he was going to kill you. In reality he was moving to give the man who was already bleeding, Eddie. Mr. Mills was enraged. The man behind the wheel, Darrin Clark, handed you the gun and ran away. Mr. Mills was able to pull you out of your car and pulled you into his own. You had to help him to hospital. He was bleeding, gravely injured, but calm and level headed. Someone had gone to get an ambulance, and they returned with an EMT and a nurse. Eddie became very angry, telling them that he wanted to die, that he couldn't go on, and that he didn't want to be alive. The EMT and the nurse reassured him that he had been hit and that he needed emergency surgery. Mr. Mills took their words to heart. For those few minutes that everyone was talking, taking care of Eddie, a calm descended upon the EMT, and everyone agreed on procedures to follow. The hospital called the local sheriff's department to ask that they and the police be waiting at the hospital to respond to a possible attempted murder charge from the victim. The subject of that conversation—that life-changing event for those who were there—was actually set up by two high school boys who went to school with one of them. The boys had snuck into the parking garage of the hospital while they were out jogging and had scoped out the scene. One of the boys, an older boy, had decided on what he could learn. He recorded the conversation on a tape recorder so he could play it back later. He had watched and

The Shroomery Is A Zombie Game. It's Called "The Shroomery" # Over a decade ago, developer Mike Bithell released the equally inspired Private Eye, a game in which you control a "ghost" to help solve mysteries around town. Using just a pixellated sprite as the game's main protagonist, Bithell's game was successful for many reasons, not the least of which was its captivating mystery. The game and its smaller adventures were charming and evocative. It also features an explosive idea: somehow, you take control of a "ghost," and interact with the environment as if you were actually a ghost. Any time you try to interact with something, any object or scene, you appear as a pixellated spirit. Your ghostly appearance changes, making a play on the very idea of "ghosts" -- in this way, it presents you with a plethora of opportunities for creative play. More than a decade later, we're still enjoying this idea and love how it's changed our perception of even very common objects, like trash cans or stoplights. # The Shroomery Is A Zombie Game. It's Called "The Shroomery" # Now, we're taking this concept to the next level with our upcoming game The Shroomery, a game inspired by our favorite pastime: mushroom foraging. As the name suggests, the game uses a bunch of really interesting technical tricks to create a compelling world of pixel ghosts hunting forays. The game's trigger mechanic is actually the first example of something we've never used before in a game. Usually, games that allow you to trigger your own movement are derivative of Pacman, Jumpman, or Spy Hunter. We've come up with something different. Normally, you can see a button, a stick, or a controller used to move, but The Shroomery presents a game mechanic unlike anything we've seen before. We're asking you to submit your own original stories and games within this whole weird universe that we're creating. We're not saying that you can't play the game at the same time as the main game, but we really want you to run and tell a friend about this world of "spooky pixel ghosts." We couldn't be more excited about this idea. A decade ago, we did something fun and different, and we love the creativity it inspired in players. Now we're doing something a little bit more ambitious, and we can't wait for people to see this wild
