"why do we use the metric system?" someone might ask. i will answer with another question. "why do we use the imperial system?" we should be using the metric system because "it is easier." if we must have a system, and of course we do, we should use something very easy to understand, and with good results. the metric system is very easy to understand, extremely versatile, and will work well with almost anything one might want to know. let's just take a look at the various units: millimeters - one thirty-sixth ( $1/36$ ) of a meter. one thirty-sixth ( $1/36$ ) of a kilometer. one thirty-sixth of a millimeter. that is versatile. one thirty-sixth ( $1/36$ ) of a second. centimeters - one thirty-fifth ( $1/35$ ) of a meter. one thirty-fifth

(1/35) of a kilometer. one thirty-fifth (1/35) of a meter. one thirty-five (1/35) of a second. meters - one fifty-sixth (1/56) of a kilometer. centimeters/inches - one hundred fifty-two eighty-three four hundred and forty-five one-hundredth (1/103,444,545) of a meter. this should make it fairly easy to convert. so what else do we know about centimeters and millimeters? let's take a look: length: one half of a centimeter is 5mm. one three hundred and twenty-fiveth (1/325,000,000) of a meter is 1,000cm. a millimeter is 3,000cm. mass: one thirty-sixth (1/36) of a gram is 0.04gm. one thirty-sixth (1/36) of a kilogram is 1000gm. time: one thirty-sixth (1/36) of a second is 0.00000333s. temperature: 1 c is 1 degree centigrade.

you may also generate a request code using your autodesk product key and serial number from a configuration profile or from a printed, blank license form. to do this, sign in to your autodesk account using the site, and enter the serial number in the appropriate field. enter the activation code you received from autodesk, and click generate code. whenever you receive an autodesk activation code from someone other than autodesk, you should ask them to provide you with the information which they used to generate it. this information should have included a serial number and a product key. an autodesk activation code will not work if you have an expired serial number. the software will not allow you to access your product. you may obtain a new serial number for your software by going to autodesk's serial number site ( <http://www.autodesk.com/serial-numbers.html> ) and clicking on the "request a new serial number" button. a new serial number and activation code will be generated. unless you have a permanent license, you can't use the activation code directly. you will need to call autodesk. to obtain the activation code from an autodesk representative, follow the instructions on the site. the representative will ask for your serial number
