The date calculator receives a defined time string with the format YYYY-MM-DD HH:MM:SS and calculates all relevant information for the specified date. For example, if you specify the time string 2010-05-01 03:00:00, then the following will be returned: * Time is in the time format HH:MM:SS of the year 2010 * There are 6 days in the given month, so the number of days is 6. * The number of days in the given year is 365, so the number of years is 4. * There are 12 months in a year, so the number of months is 12. * Therefore, the calculated date is 2010-04-18 03:00:00 In addition, the date calculator has a sophisticated date-time library, which makes the code easier to read and decreases the number of types that the user has to work with. High-tech economics firm Cambium has developed the world's first market-driven artificial intelligence, named Zopa. Researchers from the company have developed a software agent which can carry out the role of dealing with customers seeking mortgage finance. It uses analysis and decision-making methods developed in statistical modelling to match the client with the best mortgage deal available. The company has devised algorithms for personalised mortgage pricing that are driven entirely by the market, rather than by the more traditional processes of rating lending institutions by their reputations. Ethan Hawkins, director of Cambium, said: "The challenge we've set ourselves is that of developing an AI which will be more accurate, quicker to make decisions and in some cases, more ethical than the traditional lenders. "We've taken a market-based approach in developing the new technology, which uses data about consumers to provide accurate forecasts and price assessments. "The cost of this analysis is then amortised across a portfolio of different lending options. "The great thing about this approach is that it has no motive other than to save borrowers money." Zopa is an "asset allocating" agent, capable of lending to a large number of clients from a limited number of options. With this type of function, Cambium has added to an area of human effort that has traditionally involved analysis by experts. The software is capable of extending that analysis, to a greater or lesser degree, to suit the needs of the individual client. As the Zopa system is able to compare thousands of mortgages for a single client, it can be expected to be more cost-efficient than the traditional lenders. Cambium is based in London's Fulham Broadway. Zopa has yet to be tested in the real market. The firm plans to launch the system in the autumn with about 100 products on offer. It is understood that the firm will seek regulatory approval from the Financial Services Authority before the product is launched. However, the firm has been in talks with many lending institutions for some time and it is clear that many are open to the idea of a more market-based approach to pricing mortgage deals. Cambium is also aiming
