Modern Web: Creativity and Generative Art - ggordan ===== Zelphyr I'd be interesting to see some related work but I'm not sure what I'd expect to find. E.G. If I'm just messing around with the CSS and stuff then I guess a magazine-like page that randomly applies styles to a semi-random set of elements while having semi-random images as well would probably be interesting. If I could make something with a high level of design/aesthetic quality but that I knew wouldn't be too difficult to make it would be cool, too. ~~~ RcouF1uZ4gsC Some of the CSS3 features used in the web can be found in commercial products today. There is a lot of techniques for generating random layouts on the web, some of which even achieve a similar layout for images. So you might find some interesting work. ----- ggordan Some links to related works: Pseudorama: [Verse: [Keep on Diggin: [Q: What is the optimal way to monitor a complex perl program? I am developing a Perl script which is currently primarily working with SSH sessions. I'd like to be able to observe what is going on in my script just like a JUnit test case or something would. It seems that running a single process and outputting messages would be fairly useless since SSH already captures the output (in addition to the input). I'd like to observe what goes into and comes out of my process. I've found three issues at 79a2804d6b
