New Keyboard Features Including Computer Keys for Windows & Android. Key-Mapping is something we all do to make life easier. We find shortcuts to do certain tasks and find ways to make the most of our technology. If you find yourself typing the same repetitive strings of text and want to create a shortcut for your web browser, a Gmail subject or a Word document, or even to use CTRL+SHIFT to do the same thing, then you are not alone. Instead of getting frustrated with repetitive typing, you can simply switch your keymap so that you type in just a single keystroke. We all know that the best way to use our mouse is to do so with our left hand. The good news is that you do not have to move from your keyboard to your mouse, you can do this with a simple software tool. For example, if you type "m" to open your mail and "g" to open your Google, you can simply switch the keys to get the same result. This is called key mapping, and it is one of the most powerful features we have to offer. KeyMacro is an application that will create these shortcuts for you, making them more accessible than ever before. There are many options to create shortcuts for your web browser, word processor and your inbox. You can make new sets or change the key mapping you use to launch applications such as Firefox, Chrome, Explorer and even iTunes. The program can automatically record your repeated keystrokes, and it will automatically save your keymaps into a zipped file for easy reference. With the free demo version, you can test all the features. It is time to unleash your keys. KeyMacro allows you to create a number of keymap files, including one for your desktop, one for your Android phone and tablet, one for your Android tablet, one for your iPhone, and one for your Kindle Fire. What this means is that you can change keymap of your Android device to that of the computer and your email address to that of your iPhone, so that you can simply type in a word to get the result on all your devices.
