I don't want to subscribe to it with a Observer so I can only process (re-run) the events that are emitted via the Observable. Basically, I would like to define a method which returns a Completable that emits (re-runs) all observable events. How can I do that? I can't think of any sensible way. The Completable returns only when all the event handlers have finished - just like a Observable. A: If you want to attach a handler and "let it go" (as an Observable, you can do it by calling the cancel() method). The variant of.subscribe you are looking for is.subscribeOn(). Alternatively, you can define your own Observable that wraps another one and adds some "control" functionality. But you should be careful not to let other code rely on the observable, and you should not let it access the collection that Observables and the like hold. Heist (The Exploited album) Heist is a compilation album by The Exploited, released in 1991. The album was recorded in 1988, except "She's So Fine", which was recorded live for the music video. Track listing "Heist" "Sick Bastard" "Is There Anybody There?" "Till Tomorrow" "She's So Fine" "Where Are They Now?" "Second World News" "Home" "Don't Say a Word" "She Smelled" "Here We Come" References Category:The Exploited albums Category:1991 compilation albums with the Highwayman (1820), the same year as Maritana (1821), based on a historical incident, but not published until four years after the events it describes, in 1829. Operas The second half of the nineteenth century saw the development of an 'operatic boom'. One of the first operas commissioned for performance in the UK was Maria di Rohan by the composer Louis Monzinger, which premiered in 1856 at the King
